Dalton and Dillon

Dalton and Dillon are brothers. They are similar to an extent; however, there are many differences between them. Some of the differences are the way they look, the way they dress, and the way their attitude about things makes each of them unique individuals.

Dalton is eleven years old. He is five feet tall and wears a size seven in men's shoes. His hair is brown with just a slight hint of blonde sun streaks through it. He is tall, slim, and green-eyed, and his face has a faint splatter of painted-on freckles covering his nose and cheeks.

Dillon is seven years old. He is four-foot-six and wears a youth size five-and-a-half shoe. His hair is blonde, and it sticks up in the air all over his head, as if he has electricity running through his body. His build is chunky but solid, reminding one of a football player. He has big droopy blue eyes and the fattest, most-squeezable cheeks one could imagine.

Besides looks, the way each of these boys dresses is also different. Dalton is very neat and organized when it comes to his clothes. He mainly wears shirts that button, but there are times he will wear t-shirts too. His jeans have to hang precisely to the top of his boots but cannot dare wrinkle over his boots. After he gets both the jeans and shirt on, he proceeds to tuck the shirt in his jeans with all the buttons and the zipper on the jeans forming a straight line in unison with one another. If, by chance, he does wear a t-shirt, he would tuck it in his jeans also. When Dalton is completely dressed, there is a resemblance of a disciplined military general ready for duty.

In contrast, Dillon is a slouch. The bigger or baggier the shirts, shorts, or jeans, the better he likes them. He wears t-shirts the majority of the time, but there are rare occasions when he will wear a button-up shirt. He never tucks his shirts in his jeans; he prefers them to hang on the outside instead. The bottom of Dillon's jeans looks as if a mad lawnmower had run over them because he walks with them dragging the ground. When he gets completely dressed, Dillon looks like a painting with colors splashed in every direction imaginable with no set focus anywhere.

The way Dalton and Dillon dress is quite different; however, their attitudes are what set these two apart as different and unique individuals. Dalton is inquisitive about how things work and about how to invent new things. He loves to learn new stuff and is fascinated with old stuff. His favorite television stations are The History Channel, Discovery Wings Channel, and The Learning Channel. Dalton is very energetic, quiet, and never gives up on anything. If something is broken, Dalton will find a way to fix the broken object, regardless of how long it might take or what it may look like when he is finished.

On the other hand, Dillon is laidback, easygoing, and just a tad lazy. He loves to watch cartoons, and he would prefer that people wait on him. Dillon is tenderhearted and tries to look after the kids his own age while they are playing because they are smaller than he is. If someone needed a little bear to cuddle with while he or she is down in the dumps, Dillon is the one to choose.

Dalton is tall and slim. Dillon is chunky but solid built. Dalton dresses in a precise, disciplined way. Dillon dresses sloppily. Dalton is inquisitive. Dillon is easygoing and laid back. Dalton and Dillon are clearly unique individuals.
