People always remember their first job, whether they loved it or hated it, and I am no different. Luckily for me, my first job was amazing. I worked at a frozen yogurt shop called TCBY. I began working there my junior year of high school. I enjoyed working there so much that I stayed until the day I left for college. I loved my job at TCBY because of the free time, great coworkers, and effortless responsibilities.

First of all, I enjoyed this job because I had a ton of free time during my shift. During the summer, I normally had customers come in during only a few hours of the day. When the store was empty, I could watch Netflix, and I could have friends come hangout in the store with me while I had nothing to do. Also when we were slow, I was allowed to leave the store to get food.

Although I really enjoyed all the free time I had, I also loved this job because I really admired how great my coworkers were. During the two years I spent there, I got extremely close to my coworkers and bosses. When I first met my new coworkers, we instantly clicked. During our shifts, we listened to music we all enjoyed, and we talked about everything going on in our lives. We all valued each other's social lives, so we would work each other's shifts if someone had an event he or she did not want to miss. I was also extremely close to my bosses as well. I confided in them like a best friend. They bought me presents for Christmas and my birthday. They even surprised me with a Kendra Scott bracelet on my last day working for them.

Besides loving this job because of being close with my coworkers and bosses, I also loved the job because of how effortless my responsibilities at TCBY were. My job included helping and checking out customers, keeping the store stocked, and closing the store, but these chores were easy. I helped customers understand how to use the self-serve yogurt machines, and when it came to checking people out, the system was extremely simple. My boss made the check-out system easy with a color-coded button for every item in the store; the beverages were blue, the soft-serve yogurt was green, and the hand-scooped yogurt was orange. I also kept the store stocked by refilling toppings, stocking cups, switching yogurts, getting items from the back, and putting them where they needed to be; however, these jobs were super simple. I also loved how easy closing the store was. I would simply wipe down tables, sweep, mop, count the registers, turn off the lights, and lock the doors.

In conclusion, I loved my job at TCBY for many reasons. I loved how I had plenty of free time to watch TV and hangout with friends. I loved how I connected with my coworkers and bosses in ways I never thought possible. Lastly, I loved how easy the job was.
